6 Color Trends to Watch Out For in 2021, According to Designers

It happens like clockwork: every year, companies unveil their pick for the "Color of the Year," one shade that speaks to the onslaught of incoming trends and the overall mood we so desperately crave in our own spaces. But, just because a brand's "Color of the Year" is a great indication of what's to come doesn't mean it is design law. Truth is, everyone has their opinion on which colors will make it big in the upcoming year. That's exactly why we interviewed interior designers and color experts on their pigment predictions for 2021.

The predictions below run the gamut from soothing neutrals to statement-making jewel tones to deep, moody hues. But, no matter what your color of choice is, one thing's for sure: we're all yearning for a sense of calm.

> " Just because a brand's "Color of the Year" is a great indication of what's to come doesn't mean it is design law."

LIZ CAAN & CO.

"I do think warmer tones will start to outpace the greys. I think brown is going to be fashionable again, just because it's warm and classic. It reminds us of things that have been around forever which is comforting, like silver and gold."—Liz Caan, principal of Liz Caan & Co.